Portsmouth Packet Letters

Portsmouth was not the first port of call for post office packets and the Portsmouth packet letter handstamp was rarely used. However, Royal Navy ships returning to Portsmouth such as H.M.S. 'Apollo'<sup>1</sup> carrying dispatches and mails on behalf of the post office, appear to have acted as and been considered as packets.<sup>2</sup>

Cape of Good Hope to London, via Portsmouth, 27th September 1846.

PACKET-LETTER PORTSMOUTH

A letter directed by I.M.S. 'Apollo' handed to the Portsmouth office where it was marked as a packet letter (HA1661, Type 87, Robertson P1) and passed to London. Marked 'Paid' the first charge, which appears to be an '8' in red, has been deleted and a fresh charge of '1/-' substituted. There was no formal packet service to the Cape at this time and letters were normally charged as ship letters; this is an exception, and the letter has been rated according to Treasury Warrants of 1845, less the fourpence additional levy on letters beyond India.<sup>3</sup>

Her dates are: Simon's Bay, Oct. 7; St. Helens, Oct. 18; and Ascension, Oct. 27, at which latter place she stayed four days.'

A quicker, but more expensive, route than by Peninsular & Oriental steamship out of Southampton to the Far East was available to correspondents: letters could be sent by closed mail from London via Calais to Marseilles, then by British or French steam ship to Alexandria. In the 1860s this cost sixpence per half ounce, plus an extra threepence per quarter ounce for the Marseilles option.

'Via Southampton'

Envelopes with printed routing directions were produced by private stationers for correspondents who wished to ensure that a letter was sent by a particular route. Occasionally it was necessary to change the directions and make additional prepayment, as in the situation where a letter would be significantly delayed.

Mails to Bombay via Southampton and Marseilles

In the 1860s, correspondents had the option of sending letters to the East Indies via France; a quicker, but more expensive option. Nevertheless, some mail continued to be directed 'via Southampton' for the Peninsular & Oriental British packets. Some letters, although clearly directed to and paid for the cheaper route, appear to have been sent through France and have escaped further charges.
